A BOOK OF PORTRAITS

INTRODUCTION

BOOK OF PORTRAITS SUGGESTS frequently a very different conception to different individuals and often a voluminous production in which the portraits are subordinate to the text is implied. The author's conception of a book of portraits is a volume in which the portraits grasp enough of the dominant character and outstanding personality of the individual to make verbal delineation superfluous.

The prominence of the Medical Department of the Johns Hopkins University is such that a book of portraits of the group of men who have played such a preeminent role in American medicine may be of interest not only to their present and former students but to many of their colleagues and friends. For those who know these men only through their writings a natural desire to see something of their personality frequently arises. In these portraits the aim has been to express as much as possible of the individuality and character of each member of the faculty, though this has not always been an easy task, nor perhaps has it always been attained. In trying to achieve this purpose the portraits have been made in the more intimate surroundings of office, laboratory or study, thus avoiding the conventional trappings and posing of the professional studio. In their own environment natural attitudes are more readily taken with less tendency to assume an unconscious photographic expression, and it is in their more familiar haunts that their students and associates have come to picture them.

In a work of this kind it is not possible to include the entire faculty. Dr. Welch, Dr. Williams and Dr. Smith have very kindly chosen those members of the faculty whose portraits are presented. It is regrettable that Sir William Osler and Dr. William S. Halsted are missing in this group because their pupils and colleagues will ever associate their names with Johns Hopkins. It is regretted that when these portraits were made Sir William Osler was no longer at Johns Hopkins, and unfortunately, it was not possible to overcome Dr. Halsted's aversion to pose, either for the camera or for his picture in any other medium. The portraits were made in the Spring of 1920, but on account of unavoidable delays the book could not be completed sooner.

I wish to express my indebtedness to Dr. William Baer for his very kind interest and assistance, and my appreciation to all who so patiently gave their time and who so heartily cooperated to make these portraits possible. I am delighted to thank Mr. Harry Phillips for his skill and care in the photogravure reproductions and Mr. Frederic W. Goudy for his characteristic and original work in typography.
